Students use a pH sensor to explore the excess atmospheric carbon dioxide anhydride on the water pH. Students practice identification variables in a color fading experiment. Students use the concept of mole to estimate the mass and volume of a mole of beans based on a small sample of beans. Students use a pressure sensor to experimentally determine a mathematical expression of the Boyle Law. Students use a colorimeter to build a calibration curve of known solution concentrations and determine the unknown concentration of a solution ... Students determine the formula of a hydrate sample based on the mass lost when the sample is dehydrated. Students use a pressure sensor to quantify a visible relationship of pressure volume in a sample of matter. Students use a voltage sensor to measure the voltage produced by a lemon battery with copper and zinc electrodes, then use their data to design a ... Students observe the effects on a reversible reaction to equilibrium when modified Concentration or temperature. Students use a pressure and temperature sensor to observe the effect of changing various experimental conditions on the speed of a chemical reaction. Students use flame testing observations to identify an unknown compound. Students use a pressure sensor to experimentally determine the limiting and excess reagent when the quantity of a reagent is varied and analyzed ... Students seek and write on the health effects of insulating materials used at home. Students use a pH sensor to investigate how tablets They work and use a method of rear titration to determine how much of the active ingredient ... Students use a condenser to extract a distillate aromatic from a sample of spices. Students model a balance at particle level and visible level. Student search, discuss and write on a local water pollution problem.
